Introducing a New PTO Offering! Engage with authors from the International Pedagogy and Theatre of the Oppressed Journal.

Are you interested in how BIPOC artists working at the intersection of cultural production and social change are supporting their communities during the COVID-19 pandemic? This February, PTO will host Je Naé Taylor in a dialogue about the recent work Highlander Center has undertaken with their Cultural Workers Hotline and Cultural Bazaars. There will be ample time for Q&A and dialogue, so we invite you to read Je Naé's recent article in advance and come with questions! You can download the free article here.

Je Naé Taylor is a daughter of medicine folx and firefighters, and is living as a Black girl storyteller, shapeshifter and visionary. Je Naé is most curious about the practice of joy and sustenance needed to live extraordinary. She is a founding member of the Healing & Safety Council of BYP100.
